

Catch a West End show for free in South Quay

Written by Administrator

Wednesday, 11 February 2015 10:58 -

The West End really has come East as productions are clambering to rehearse at Lanterns Studio Theatre in South Quay. And it's great news for theatre fans as each show that visits is asked by Lanterns' boss Janet Viola to hold a free open rehearsal.

Last month Bronowski Productions' Hairspray, produced by Oli Some, did just that.

Oli said: "It's such a fantastic space. You come in here and then you're not bothered for the rest of the time. In other theatres where there's performances going on it's very distracting. The performers hate it. "Open rehearsals are great for the cast - it's the first time they've been able to perform the show in front of an audience and they get some feedback."

In the coming months Wayne Macgregor's Random Dance Company will provide open classes and workshops. Jamiel Laurence from Lanterns said: "Check our website and Facebook pages as we announce how you can be involved."

Click here to read original article